Yuletide Parade Will Be Held On Friday Morning

The Murray Junior Chamber of Commerce in cooperation with the merchants of Murray is sponsoring a special program of activities for holiday shoppers on Friday morning.

The night's activity is expected to draw a huge throng of shoppers and add a holiday spirit to the season buying. Santa Claus will be present throughout the evening. Stores will close later than usual, and hot coffee, hot chocolate, popcorn and candy will be served free.

Completed arrangements include plans for a choral group to sing Christmas Carols and for decoration of the shopping area. The stores which normally close at 5 o'clock on Friday, will be open until 8:00 p. m.

The entertainment, hot coffee and chocolate, popcorn, candy and etc. will be completely free. The night's program of activities is simply a community gesture on the part of the Jaycees and the local merchants.

Merchants will feature special holiday day bargains on this first day of December. Only 19 shopping days will be left 'til Christmas.

Stores will be afforded an opportunity Friday night to show residents of the city and county the huge array of gift items that can be found in Murray this Christmas season.

At the same time shoppers will have an opportunity to avoid last minute rushes and shop from complete varieties and assortments.

Merchants' lay-away and payment plans are some of the buying attractions expected to swell season buying.

Electric System Adds "Cherry Picker" To Its Equipment

The Murray Electric System is employing its new "cherry picker" today in putting up Christmas decorations around the court square.

The new piece of equipment, the latest innovation in facilities created for crafts which need to work in difficult to reach places, consists of twin buckets on a long shaft. The "buckets" can be maneuvered to the exact place where a lineman needs to work whether it is on a pole or in some other area difficult to reach.

Controls are located both in the cab of the truck on which the apparatus is fixed and in one of the buckets.

The use of the "cherry picker" is expected to not only speed up work in the system, but also will add to the safety program of the system.

Cigarettes Said To Be The Major Cause, Lung Cancer

By RONALD H. NESSEN

United Press International

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cigarettes are a major cause of lung cancer and the federal government should regulate their advertising and sale to children, according to a government cancer expert.

Dr. Michael B. Shimkin, associate director of field studies for the National Cancer Institute, said Monday night that he did not believe cigarette smoking should be made illegal because such prohibition failed in the case of liquor.

However, he told a public meeting on cigarettes and cancer, sponsored by the District of Columbia Medical Society, that the death rate from lung cancer is 10 times higher for persons who smoked more than a pack a day than for non-smokers.

Affects Light Smokers

Although persons who did not inhale, smoked only a few cigarettes a day or smoked pipes or cigars are safer than heavy smokers, according to Shimkin, their death rate from lung cancer is still higher than that of non-smokers.

Another speaker, Dr. Richard H. Overholt, professor at the Tufts Medical College in Boston, suggested that cigarette vending machines should be banned because they make it possible for children to buy cigarettes.

He also said cigarette sellers should be licensed like liquor dealers, and tobacco should be made subject to the Pure Food and Drug Act so the government could control advertising and shipping.

Give Up Smoking

Shimkin and Overholt said they had seen up smoking. All the speakers at the meeting said there was "clear and definite" evidence that prolonged and heavy smoking was a cause of lung cancer, other forms of cancer and heart disease.

"Our lungs were not made to inhale partially-combusted vegetable matter," Shimkin said.

Overholt said that if a person stops smoking, his body will repair within about six weeks much of the damage he said was caused by smoking.

Overholt, an authority on chest diseases, said the best way to give up cigarettes was to stop smoking entirely rather than trying to taper off.

Appearance Of Duke Brings To Mind Abdication 25 Years Ago

By HARRY FERGUSON

The Duke and Duchess of Windsor came quietly into London the other day and on the platform at Victoria Station there took place another little scene in the drama of the uncrowned king.

A reporter asked them whether they would call on Princess Margaret to see her new son. The duke hesitated and then said he did not know. What he meant was that he did not know whether he would be invited. The duchess did not hesitate at all: "Oh, I don't think so. I am just here for my Christmas shopping spree."

She knows only too well that the rates of every royal residence, from Buckingham Palace to the smallest hunting lodge, are forever slammed and locked against her. She has never been received by any member of the royal family—The duke and duchess are staying in a suite at Claridge's Hotel.

It will be 25 years next month since Edward VIII abdicated before he was crowned because he "found it impossible to carry the heavy burden of responsibility without the help and support of the woman I love."

There has been a sudden resurgence of interest in this island in the drama of how for a few weeks the slim, well-manicured hand of the lady from Baltimore shook

Residential Areas To Receive Service Beginning December 1

The Murray Sanitation System will inaugurate residential service on December 1 according to a report issued last night by Maurice Crass Jr. before the City Council.

Service to the business area has already begun with the smaller of the two compact type trucks which will be used in the garbage collection. Crass told the City Council which was in special session, that the larger of the two trucks which had been ordered has arrived and is now being tried out. City residents will receive free service on Wednesday and Thursday on a partial basis in order to get routes established and to get city employees used to handling the equipment.

Residents will receive a post card from the city advising them that the service is to begin on December 1 and what the rates will be.

Last night a new crew was hired for the collection truck, one driver and three tipplers. Loyd McKee will be the truck driver and the three tipplers are Eddie David Davis, Thomas Reed and James Willis. The present truck which is being used in the business area has Coy Crass as driver, and Willis Daniel, Bill Lyons and Audie Westerman as tipplers.

All residents are requested to obtain metal garbage cans, with handles, and tight cover. The cans should be no less than ten gallons in capacity and no more than thirty gallons. Twenty gallon cans are suggested as being about the right size.

Residents do not have to separate trash and garbage since it is all placed into the truck. The can will be picked up at any reasonable place on the resident's property. The route will be made once each week. The business area is being covered daily.

The charges for the collection and disposal service will be on the monthly water bill and the following scale will be used:

- Single family residence $1.25
- Duplex residence, each unit $1.25
- Single family residence with one apartment $2.00
- Single family residence with more than two roomers $2.25
- Residence with only one person 75¢

Four new city councilmen were present as guests for the meeting last night. They were Haron West, Roy Starks, Frank Ryan, and Jack Belote.

The meeting last night was to make up for a meeting which was missed on November 17.

COMMUNISM HAS NOT CHANGED

FOR THREE HOURS Sunday afternoon we sat before our television set, the longest period that we can remember, and listened and watched to various speakers address a large audience in an anti-communist rally on the west coast.

We were thrilled to hear speaker after speaker, regardless of his American party affiliation, speak out on the threat of communism. They called "a spade a spade" in no uncertain terms.

A former FBI man called for an investigation of the United States State Department for the aid and comfort they have given to communism for the past twenty years.

One speaker called for an embargo by all western nations against the nations behind the iron curtain, which would cut off many food supplies and needed materials which might foment a revolution against their masters.

Another listed the five definite steps taken by the communists as they take over a nation. Another pointed out that communism does not change. The tactics of the communist party might change, but their goal never changes.

He pointed out that anything is right, anything is moral, anything is honest, anything is legal, for the communist, as long as it promotes the welfare of the communist party. Communists live by their own set of rules, he continued, and they are foreign to our rules.

We must learn to fight by their rules if we are to win, he cautioned.

The speakers pointed out that it is difficult for Americans to realize just how the communist fights, because of our background and heritage. We think in terms of fair play, humanitarianism, compassion, morality and ethics, while the communist speaks in any such act or word as dead-end weakness.

The only thing in the mind of the communist is to promote and advance communism at the expense of any ideal, word, bond, dignity, or personality.

Americans are by nature complacent and it was the purpose of this rally to rock them from this complacency with the knowledge that America is at war now.

We can win over communism by being aware of the threat. There is no such thing as co-existence, co-existence means to a communist that he is hiding his time to better place "the knife" where it will do the most harm.

We think it is the duty of every American to study the functions of the United States government, be aware of the kind of people elected to office, make it a point to study the "deals" we make with other nations, as boring as they sometimes may be, and to be aware of what is going on as possible. Indeed it is not only their duty, but may well be their salvation.

The passing of years has restored some of the affection that the British lavished on the duke when he was a carefree, fair-haired prince falling off horses and giving women everywhere cardiac palpitations. As he goes through the London streets people frequently shout "Merry Christmas, Sir."

And persons in their thirties fondly recall how their parents raised them out of bed at 10 o'clock on the night of Dec. 10, 1936, to hear the voice from Windsor Castle saying:

United Press International
NEW YORK (UPI) — Big Ten champion Ohio State, unbeaten but tied once in nine games, was named the No. 1 major college football team today in the next-to-last weekly balloting by the United Press International coaches rating board.

Alabama (9-0), which finishes up this Saturday against Auburn, was the No. 1 pick of 15 coaches. The Crimson Tide held first-place a week ago with 25 votes for the top spot.

With ballots scores, on a basis of 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 points for votes from first to 10th Ohio State received a total of 329 points while Alabama got 316. A week ago, Alabama had 337 points, or 13 shy of a perfect score, while the Buckeyes had 279 in second place.

Minnesota, third a week ago, slipped to seventh this week as a result of a 23-21 upset by Wisconsin and was replaced by Orange Bowl bound Louisiana State in the most significant change of the week. Texas, which whipped Texas A&M, 25-0, on Thanksgiving Day to win the Southwest Conference title and a Cotton Bowl berth, took only fourth place, while Mississippi, headed for the Cotton Bowl, was fifth, up a notch.

Colorado, the Big Eight Conference champion which will play LSU in the Orange Bowl on New Year's Day, advanced two places from eighth to sixth; Michigan State, a strong Rose Bowl candidate, slipped a notch from seventh to eighth despite a 34-7 win over Illinois; Arkansas was ninth, up one spot, and Purdue got back into the select group, moving up from 13th, to complete the top 10.
Michigan, which was ninth a week ago, dropped out of the top 20, drawing one point along with unbeaten Rutgers.

Lion In The Hills
By JOHN B. PRESCOTT

CHAPTER 21
THE WINTER wore on. With each new storm Alec Temple's hopes sank, for the onslaught of each storm made Rusty's life harder and set the day further back when he and Sam Fellows might try to find Rusty's trail.

On the other hand, reason, as well as Alec Temple's manner these days, told him that, in the big scale of things, the country was bound to benefit.

Each storm made the snow-pack deeper; each flake that fell upon water-saturated was its way, however minuscule, a safeguard against the dry seasons that, in their own time, were bound to come.

"Unless the winds are bad in March," Claude said to Alec one day. "We could lose it yet, if they are. Or a lot of it."

"Would it be so bad to lose some?" Alec said.

Claude laughed. He seemed to laugh easily nowdays, since the fire, his whole manner had undergone a lightning.

"We could spare a little, maybe," he said. "But let's not push our luck. Your lion's all right in any event."

Alec was a little surprised to find that Claude knew what he was driving at, but then perhaps he shouldn't have been surprised.

It was easier to talk to Claude now. Alec was no longer aware of that peculiar restraint that he had often felt before, that sense in Claude of something held back that he was fearful of showing.

And it was all owing to the fire, when Claude had overcome his paralyzing memory and made himself face and do what had to be done.

Yet, for Alec, there still remained that other blaze, that wholly tragic conflagration far off in place and time. And while he knew now what the ultimate horror of that had come to, it was still knowledge gained only by inference, because the image of that other canyon was superimposed upon it now and he knew what he would see.

But it came, in time, and in quite a natural way, toward the end of February, when the last of the great storms had come and gone.

"It's hard to tell what we'll see out there when the growing season begins," Claude said one morning.

It was a day of small repairs about the place. The two were replacing a length of frozen pipe in the storage-tank line, and in a pause Claude waved his arm at the burn under the cliffs.

"It'll be a time before there are any trees, I suppose," Alec said.

"Except for those we put in,"

Claude said. "Seedling pine for now, mostly. Left alone, though, it'd be a time. We may get some fern back in there, and other small stuff, but we'll have to wait and see what the ground looks like to be sure."

"Had the fire been up on top," Alec said, "the aspen would be first to come up again, wouldn't it?"

"Yes, that's right, but you've got to be high for that. Different parts of a country have a different recovery growth after a fire. As a regular thing, it's interior to the original, but it won't be here, because we'll plant what we want."

He paused a moment there, and in the pause Alec saw his glance go out across the burn and come to rest on the blackened cliff, and he was quiet, because the manner of Claude's glance seemed to go beyond it, perhaps to yet other cliffs.

"Sometimes," Claude went on, "I wonder what that other canyon looks like now. After nine years, it's bound to have something in it."

Alec did not have to ask what other canyon Claude meant, for it was all in Claude's face when he turned to look at him — nine years of tortured memory, and also, perhaps, an unspoken plea for understanding and forgiveness.

Alec was holding the new length of pipe in his hands, but he set it down now, carefully and slowly, for he knew that he was going to hear what he'd often wanted to ask about but never had.

"It wasn't much different than this," Claude said while his eye went outward again. "Smaller, though, and narrower, and grown up thick and heavy with a species of Asiatic pine. It was a true box canyon, too, with the headwall end of it sheer rock for two thousand feet. The canyon was under it."

Alec stared at the pipe in the snow. He did not follow Claude's glance toward the canyon wall, because the image of that other canyon was superimposed upon it now and he knew what he would see. Claude's description was enough.

"It was my mistake to let her come up there for that week," Claude went on, "but I couldn't say no. Our anniversary fell on one of those days, and she was bound to come up. I knew the country was dry and that unexploded land mines and shells went off from time to time the area; but I didn't put the two together. I wanted to see her, too, and I just didn't think of the danger."

That was where the main point lay, Alec thought. That was what had eaten away at Claude all these years.

"But you couldn't think of everything," he said. "No one can."

"I should have thought of the possibilities," Claude said. "But I was blinded by the wish to have her with me. I loved her, son, so very much."

Alec pushed his boot at the foot, and then he spoke. "Yes, that's true, but you've got to be high for that. Different parts of a country have a different recovery growth after a fire. As a regular thing, it's interior to the original, but it won't be here, because we'll plant what we want."

"Where was I, then?" he asked, and was glad to find relief from the sudden pressure of Claude's last remark. It was a point that he'd often wondered about, too.

"In Seoul," Claude answered. "Your mother left you there in care of Army friends. And I've wished a thousand times that she'd stayed there herself. But, of course, she wouldn't. She had to come. She had to come, and she had to be in that cabin, too, when the canyon went up around her. It was almost like fate, except that it was my fault for letting her come, my fault for failing to hold the fire, and in the end my fault for failing to get her out."

He finished in a low, sinking voice that seemed to trail off into nowhere, and when Alec looked up, he saw his father standing spraddle-legged in the snow, his face bent downward into his hands. Again that feeling of not knowing what to do, or how to deal with it, that helpless sensation of exposure to a force not wholly understood, came over him.

"Well, now you know," Claude said, raising his face once more. "I guessed it, I think," Alec said. "When we had the fire here."

"I've wanted to tell you many times," Claude said. "But somehow I couldn't bring myself to do it."

"It wasn't your fault," Alec said, and it was all he could think of.

"I was afraid to, son."

"Afraid?" Alec looked at him hard, trying to picture fear in Claude.

Claude nodded slowly, and he spoke slowly, too. "Afraid I'd lose you, your respect, your devotion. At the time, I felt I did not deserve them."

All at once in Alec's mind the pattern of Claude's manner toward him, his attitudes and behavior during the past nine years, became more subtle in nature. Where Alec had doubted his own worth and appeal to Claude, he began to understand that the truth was quite different; in fact, it was wholly opposite of what he'd thought and felt for so very long, for Claude had felt the same way toward him.

A shocking experience involving Rusty awaits Alec. Continue the story tomorrow.

100th Division Undertakes NCO School

FORT CHAFFEE, Ark. — A special school for non-commissioned officers will begin at Fort Chaffee next week under the auspices of the 100th Division (Training). The first 44-man class of the N-C-O-Academy will report to the new school on Sunday (November 26) for four weeks (176 class hours) of leadership training. Non-commissioned officers are corporals and sergeants.

Conducted by the 100th Regiment of the 100th Division, the academy has instructors and cadre from throughout the division. It will be the only such school in the Army operated by a reserve unit on active duty.

The course has been established primarily to give instruction to 100th Division personnel, but a few N. C. O.'s from other units at Chaffee also will be invited, according to Capt. Robert O. Collins of Louisville, school commandant.

The curriculum, which is prescribed by Army regulations, is designed to sharpen the skills and knowledge of the N-C-O's for their job of giving basic and advanced infantry training. It includes 40 hours of method-of-instruction classes, 32 hours of drill and ceremony classes, 28 hours of tactics, eight hours of weapons familiarization, and the remaining time in general Army subjects.

"We hope to rekindle their desire to make on-the-spot correction, which in turn maintains the standard of the division's training," Captain Collins said.

The academy is an outgrowth of a seven-day N. C. O. refresher course which has been in operation for a month. The academy is expected to continue for six to eight months.

The Gophers, bidding for their second consecutive Big Ten title, were, detailed by the Badgers 23-21.

Parisian Milliners Decree Tilted Chapeaux
For Wear With Street and Evening Costumes

By SUSAN BARDEN

BACKING up the forecast silhouette first shown by New York milliners last July, the famous hat-designers of France have come out unanimously for the sidesweep slant, giving an entirely new concept to chic hats for fall and winter and offering women the lift of a tilt to frame their faces.

The angled hat, angled either off to the side or horizontally back, brings a new look to favorite cloche, toque and beret shapes.

Rich Colors

Colors are deep and rich, with russet very important in most collections. Some of the Parisian milliners like jade green, brown and peach.
Others stick to the traditionally smart black and white, while the more daring go in for peacock blue, ruby red, bronze and old gold yellow.

Color contrasts are frequently seen, very often audacious, and constituting the sole trimming.

A variety of soft, pliable fabrics were chosen to lend movement to the silhouettes.
A butter-soft leather is an existing new medium they have used for fascinating, side-swept cloches and eye-tatch-ing turbans.

Other Fabrics

Felts, jersey, velvet and veiling all add their luxurious appeal to magnificent creations destined to amuse, delight and beautify the chic woman.

BARTHELEMY DESIGNED this big-domed toque of fur felt.
It is in a beige shade with a russet border and bow.

SMOKE-GRAY VELVET is the color used for a balloon-beret by Gilbert Ortel. It is worn off the forehead.
